Cursed by the Drummer that Cursed my Sister too

As a boy, I ran through the woods
Without purpose or thought,
With only the breeze to push me on,
As the splendor of nature's finest
Watched and cheered.
As years went by, the trees grew taller,
Along with these feelings of
An unknown source of energy,
Like the sun exploding from within,
A constant spectacle for all the world
To see and wonder.
The years have grown wiser now,
Burning a path for me to follow,
With an understanding of who we Really are, and where the hell
Man is headed.
To understand and see life,
To believe,
The more you love life,
The more you live it,
Listening to the beat of that
Distant drummer,
That lies deep within oneself,
That spirit, that keeps telling you
There's no place to get off,
And no where to hide.
To continue on into the universe,
An endless journey of mountainous highs,
Ocean deeps and nature's way of learning.
I keep running further...
I keep seeing more...
I keep learning to keep going...
As the drummer relentlessly beats on,
The pounding of my Heart.

— Rick "the wind"
