

Greenburgh Planning Board Will Inspect All Developments Proposed Within Jurisdiction

High Cost Checks Road Improvement

New Body Intends to Prevent Haphazard Real Estate Improvements. Name Committees to Study Projects. Want Zone Change.

The Greenburgh Planning Board, organized last night at its established headquarters in the Greenville fire house, five representative members met to discuss the task of taking the multiplicity of large scale real estate operations in the town, out of the realm of what is haphazard and establishing them upon a level dictated by reasonable principles.

All the drawbacks ever confronting a new thing were present. The limits of authority, the proved method of procedure, the meeting of minds not yet used to the conference habits of each other, these things made it plain to the commissioners, themselves, that there are several twilight zones of legal obscurities and practical obstructions through which the body must feel its way before coming upon the high road to well-principled action.

Upon one essential point, however, there is no division at all. In every instance of dynamic unanimity which results that nothing upward in real estate development should be done in the town which will escape the board members. They require personal inspection of the premises involved in each subdivision brought to their attention for approval, whether final or preliminary as those dates have been, or official and needing definitive official action.

This aspect of vigilance on the part of the members of the dual body, as a planning board, in which capacity its powers are extreme, was well illustrated last night in the meeting. Two Chairman Elyar appointed a committee of two to visit the property involved, in company with the applicant's engineer, and once the board resolved to inspect a proposed subdivision area in the body.

John Kakerbeck and F. Morden took over the details of examining a proposed development north of Elmford and east of the Saw Mill known as the "Cottowald" street development. Engineer Daniel C. Nolan of Cottowald Way appeared for the owner.

Mr. Clark again, and Seeba W. Bullock took the assignment to investigate property near the intersection of Hartdale and Secor roads. John Heesey appeared to present the plan of this subdivision to the board.

The matter passed to visit Butler park. The proposed development of seventy acres south of the Hartdale station and adjoining the railroad right of way, the Scarsdale Golf Club, and on the south, the property of Alexander M. Crane.

In regard to this property the new board members from the town proposed an inquest of zoning, an inquest which as the developers envision an area 200 feet deep and 400 feet long, running beside the railroad as a business section. It is at present zoned for residence A.

District Attorney May Move for Re-trial of R. H. Sloane Monday

Convicted of Automobile Theft

(Continued From Page One) he was County Judge on the strength of affidavits made by two prison convicts, Frank Hawk and Edward Snyder.

County Judge Frederick P. Close, who will preside at the re-trial, yesterday signed an order directing the warden of Sing Sing to transfer Sloane to the State Prison for two years.

This indicates that Sloane plans to use the convicts as his chief witnesses. He is expected to conduct his own defense as he has done on previous occasions in court.

Stuart Baker of Osnising, who advised him during his trial two years ago, will probably act as a witness for Sloane again.

Sloane was brought back here from Sing Sing, after discovery of an alleged plot to break jail in which keepers said he was implicated, and tried for feloniously possession dangerous weapons—imitation brass knuckles of prison cell manufacture—while serving a term for commission of a felony.

The boy convict, whose mother is a distinguished writer and lecturer, admitted that he had planned to escape prison but said he had abandoned the idea and after sawing through his cell bars had contrived a blow torch to weld the bars in place again. He denied that he had planned to use the convicts as his chief witnesses.

Although Sloane impressed the jury and a courtroom crowded with spectators and the best legal brains in the county with his masterful defense and his ingenious inventions and articles manufactured with smuggled tools behind cell doors, he was convicted and sentenced to two years in Sing Sing.
