Dr. Davenport "Kills" Bear at the White Plains Gun Club

Shows Prowess With Rifle Is Guest of Club for Day

Noted Explorer Is Right in His Element on Range at White Plains Gun Club.

IN spite of the heavy rain which fell Saturday afternoon the members of the White Plains Gun Club turned out in force at their new shooting lodge to honor Dr. Davenport, the noted scientist and explorer and only white survivor of a recent five-year expedition to Africa, who was their guest for the day. A police escort took Dr. Davenport to the lodge where about fifty members of the club greeted him. After that they all participated in an informal shoot and later in a campfire dinner.

No scores of the shooting were kept but before and after the rain the explorer entered into the competition with a zest and showed his experience with both the smaller rifle and 405 guage gun, more like the gun he is used to handling in the tropics.

Wins—Dr. Davenport were his two black 'boys,' M'bwanga and Mosaamba, who carried him a hundred miles ones when he was hurt.

Dr. Davenport had many stories to tell of these boys to the Daily Press representative who found him at the lodge very much in his element. Neither of them had been out of the jungle before he brought them to America. They proved to be a bit of a problem when it came to disciplining them in the ways of the city.

Once Dr. Davenport left them in his office for a short time a while ago when the weather was particularly hot. When he came back he found them sound asleep in chairs, a happy expression on their faces and completely naked. Their clothes were strewn all over the room. The heat of New York was more unbearable to them than that of their native land despite the fact that it sometimes gets to be 130 degrees there.

Kills Dummy Bear

During the afternoon Dr. Davenport and some of the members of the club shot at a dummy bear about 150 yards away. Davenport started Mosaamba to retrieve it. The latter did so and when he returned and they were examining the mark of the bullet he asked the explorer in his native tongue why they did not bury the bear as he was obviously shot through the heart and entirely dead.

Both these blacks are scarred on their faces where the tribal marriage are indelibly imprinted by cutting wounds and rubbing them with dirt. They were dressed in civilized clothes but Mosaamba wore beautiful ivory earrings. Dr. Davenport explained that the natives all pierced their ears when young.

Incidentally, when the fake bear that Dr. Davenport had been shooting was examined it was found that one shot was in the heart and several had hit vital spots. He was shooting with a strange gun at that.

Dr. Davenport explained to the club members and the Press representative that distances are deceptive in Africa due to the intense sunlight. For that reason shooting is very hard.

Small Men Best

Dr. Davenport is a fairly small, wiry individual whom one might pick out to be a clerk in an office instead of an intrepid explorer, yet most of his life has been spent in the wilds of many countries. This seeming physical drawback proves to be a great asset according to the scientist himself when asked about it. He states that a small, wiry individual has a greater chance to survive the rigors of jungle life than a large man would. He gave no explanation but stated it as a fact. A man of his type seems to have more stamina and is more impervious to disease than the other.

Dr. Davenport also wears glasses and says he is just recovering from sun blindness. These glasses have saved his eyes from being torn by thorns while traveling through particularly bad stretches of country. He exhibited numerous scratches on their surfaces.

After all the members and Dr. Davenport had enough shooting they all partook of a huge dinner on the porch of their lodge. The meal had been cooked over a large open fire in the rear of the building and proved to be the climax of the afternoon. While at the table Dr. Davenport recounted some of his exploits on various expeditions from Africa and told the men present several anecdotes which few people have heard. They were hair-raising stories told with a casualness that made them seem more remarkable.

Shows Pictures

When it got too dark for further maneuvering all the members returned to White Plains where Dr. Davenport delivered a lecture illustrated by some amazing moving pictures of his five-year trip in Africa. On the platform he announced that he had been elected a life member to the White Plains Gun Club, and later stated that he intended to send the bones of two rare animals to the club to adorn its wall.

Dr. Davenport is a friend of Oakley Clark, of White Plains, and president of the club. That was how the club was so fortunate in having the explorer as a guest and to obtain the showing of the pictures, which have not been shown elsewhere to date by the explorer.

HILLVIEW IS DEFEATED BY NORTH CASTLE

Winners Are Compiling a Great Record This Season —Motts Scores Two Runs of the Three Made.

The North Castle baseball team is fast becoming a formidable organization. Winning the ninth game out of ten starts was not so easy for the team but they showed their ability by coming through in the pinches in fine shape and tallying by forcing the play. The team that was beaten this time was the Hillview nine of Yonkers, who had won from North Castle before.

Motts of North Castle was the individual hero of the game. He scored two of the three runs and one of these runs was made entirely by himself. He singled in the first inning with two out, stole second without delay and then pranced around to third while the opposing pitcher was still in a fog. To cap that he raced home on an infield out and brought the second run across. Later in the third inning he brought home the winning run.

Hillview made their two tallies in the second frame on a hit by Stevens, an error by Odell and a hit by Wilmer. But that was the best they could do for in several frames they were turned away from the plate three in a row and had little chance to become dangerous.

Kraus struck out nine men during the game but Hopkins topped that record by three. The game was tight throughout with both sides fighting to score and fighting just as hard to keep the other team from bringing in a run. There was no let-down in the entire eight innings.

Next Sunday North Castle will play the Bodgm team at Bodgm.

BASEBALL SIDELIGHTS

Yesterday's hero: Rogers Hornsby, who drove in all his team's runs as the Chicago Cubs increased their lead in the National League race to eight full games by beating the Boston Braves, 3 to 1. "The Rajah" did it with a homer, a single and a double, while Root was toying with the tribe.

As the Pirates lost to the Robins at Ebbets Field by a 5 to 3 score, the distance separating them from the Cubs lengthened by an entire game. Everything appeared to be nicely set for a Pittsburgh victory, too, as they were leading, 3 to 1, in the eighth, with two out. Frederick then hit a homer, Herman doubled and Hendrick and Bissonette followed with homers, much to the distress of Remy Kremer who was on the hill for the Corsairs.

Carl Hubbell, slender Giant southpaw, let the Cincinnati Reds down with five scattered hits, and would have shut them out but for Andy Cohen's error in the ninth. New York winning handily, 6 to 1.

The Yankees threw a lead compiled on Babe Ruth's 500th homer and Lou Gehrig's 27th of the current season, tossing away a ball game and a chance to gain on the Athletics by making four errors which helped the Cleveland Indians to beat 'em, 6 to 5.

The Macksmen also had an excellent chance to win in the west, but a four-run rally in the last of the ninth and Roy Johnson's homer inside the park in the 11th gave the Detroit Tigers an unexpected 9 to 8 triumph. With Earnshaw pitching the A's were getting along nicely until the ninth, when Red Ruffing gave him a homer with two on. John Pleus Quinn was rushed to the rescue, but Cronin's wif heave paved the way for another run which tied the score.

Al Thomas allowed the Boston Red Sox five hits, the White Sox bunching their seven off Ruffing for enough runs to achieve a 6 to 3 victory.

The Washington Senators dragged the St. Louis Browns out of third place, allowing the Indians to move up, by winning a twilight ball game, long delayed by rain, 7 to 5. The Browns staged a three-run rally in the ninth, driving Burke from the box, but couldn't catch up. The Indians are in third place by half a game, with the Detroit Tigers now only 2 1-2 games back of the Browns.

FIREMEN GIVE CONTEST AWAY

Present Brookfield Team With Game By Making Many Errors; Score Is 10-4.

The Scarsdale Firemen went down before the onslaught of the Brookfield All Stars of Port Chester yesterday when the team as a whole was unable to do much but chalk up error after error. The Brookfields were presented with runs right and left and could not have lost the game if they had tried. In the third inning they scored four runs on one hit.

Starrubin struck out fourteen men in the course of the game and Bob Irish, of the Firemen, was not far behind him with ten. When it came to checking up on errors it was found that Scarsdale was far in the lead.

The score of the game was 10 to 4.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

BY FRANK GETTY

WHAT'S ALL THE SHOOTING FOR?

The difficulty Madison Square Garden Corporation had—or may still be having for all or those—in arranging the Jack Sharkey-Max Schmeling heavyweight bout for September, raises the question of whether it was worth the trouble.

William F. Carey, president of Madison Square Garden but new to the ways of boxing, could have built a railroad around China with all the time, trouble and energy he put into arranging the contest.

The biggest obstacle which Carey had to overcome was in straightening out the contract tangle into which Schmeling entangled himself when he gave the nix to his German manager, Arthur Bulow.

Bulow signed a contract for Schmeling to fight under Humbert J. Fugazy's promotion at Ebbets Field. In some manner of meanfair or foul—Jimmy Johnston, one of the most influential of boxing managers, had his fighter, Phil Scott of England, named as the opponent for Schmeling in Fugazy's contract.

It meant money for eJhnson, Big Money, Scott, with his long reach, hooking ability and strength, might defeat Schmeling, and the big Britisher would then be in line for another purse.

Schmeling—by his American managers—irrevocably refused to meet Scott. That was all right, but why should M. S. G. take the trouble to straighten out a foreign fighter's affairs when he refused to turn a finger to help Carey?

The Garden, naturally, is in business for profit. The Schmeling-Sharkey match will make money, but the Schmeling-Sharkey match is not by any chance the most promising match ever arranged.

While all the bulletins was in town, an American boxer, one of the greatest of all time and a credit to the game would sit by begging for a chance to meet either Schmeling or Sharkey.

For that matter, Tommy Loughran is still standing by, waiting for his chance at the overrated heavyweights. He had to wait 7 years and 8 months before getting a chance at the light-heavyweight title and when he won the title he proved himself the greatest 175-pound king of all time. It doesn't seem fair, but the answer to that is anything is fair in boxing.

It is our opinion that Loughran can whip either Schmeling or Scott, and will do so if he ever gets either of them in the ring.

Loughran has not lost a bout in four years. He has cleaned up the light-heavyweight division of contenders. He has whipped every heavyweight that would fight him.

The only thing that can be said against him is that he does not have a long string of knockouts to his credit. Schmeling failed to knock out Sergyra, and Paulino Uscudun did not knock out Johnny Risko; at the Cleveland Hilmp was on his feet when the contest was stopped in the 9th round.

Schmeling has three times been knocked out himself. Sharkey has been stopped twice. Loughran has never been knocked out.

Blow a Thousand to Won

Unless there is still someone who doesn't think the Philadelphia Athletics have won the American League pennant, it might be pointed out just how they did the trick—or if there are any objections—just why they're pennant bound.

It was very simple: The A's could beat the Senators and the Yanks couldn't beat the Indians.

Philadelphia won sixteen out of its first eighteen games against Washington. New York lost eight of its first eleven games against Cleveland.

Pennant winners are frequently made by their ability to beat the tailenders. The Cardinals won the National League pennant last year b ytheir ability to beat the Phillies and Braves. The Giants' inability to beat Brooklyn this season has practically knocked them out of the National League race.
