Butler as Bully.

The President's counsel and his friends, who started off in the impeachment trial with the avowed intention of beating the House impeach-

This very meek Stanbery was the first to show anything ungentlemanly upon this trial, losing his temper and saying some naughty things, but like a good many others, it appears that he woke up the wrong passenger.

The Impeachment Trial.

The impeachment trial proceeded on the 16th, notwithstanding the illness of Mr. Stanbery. The evidence was mostly documentary.

Col. Moore, the President's Private Secretary was recalled and examined. Witness had in his hand a paper containing the nomination of Thomas Ewing for Secretary of War, which he swore the President handed him on the 22nd day of February, but which was dated on the 21st.

Documents from the Navy Department showing the practice which had prevailed in that Department in respect to removals, were put in. Also Buchanan's message to the Senate relating to the resignation of Secretary Floyd.

At this point Mr. Curtis said they had completed their documentary evidence as far as they were then aware, and the court adjourned.

Another "Joke."

The New York Times says: "In the investigation of certain political frauds in the Pennsylvania Legislature, Rev. Thomas Tracy, a priest of Clearfield, testified that he paid a man named O'Meara $500 to leave the State while the inquiry was going on, in order that he might not appear as a witness; and that he did this at the instance of Senator Wallace, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee.

The McGee Assassination.

The New York Herald Ottawa correspondent, writing from Ottawa on Saturday morning, says: "Your clever detective, Cullen, in moving about McKenna's saloon, on Sparks street, nearly opposite the scene of the murder, found out that the adjoining house, or part of it, was untenanted, and that it had been so for the past month—all the doors, front or otherwise, being, strange to say, constantly open.

Voting on the new Constitution of South Carolina began on Tuesday, 14th.

POST OFFICE, CORNER 2 X ROADS, (which is in the Statute of Kentucky,) April 9, 1868.

The Corners is continually eggited. Scarcely does one fever git herself allayed afore another is set a goin, and the result is the community is kept a bilen perpetually.

The last eggitement wuz probably the most pekoolyer that ever happened to - enny people, tho it wuz nothin more than cood to be expected to grow out uv the altered relashens uv the races to each other.

Under the old patriarkle system, it wuz the custom uv the niggers to go by the name uv their truly patriarkle masters, wich was necessary, and not only necessary but proper.

trustworthy Caucasian citizens. Hence this preliminary eggaminashun. We hev here niggers uv mixed blood from every plantashun in the naberhood, and weshel reject all who can't show mixed blood.

"Hold," shrieked the Deekin, observin that Mrs. Pogram had just stepped into the room; "how much is at shoo in this yer soot?"

"Ninety cents and the costs that have accrued," sed Pollock.

"I'll pay it," remarkt the Deekin, nervously, "rather than have this farce go on. Don't call no more on me—don't. Here's the money."

"Well," sed Bigler, "ez there appears to be sich a yoonanimus desire therefor, I hev no objection, on them terms, to forgive Pollock, and the cusses embraced in open court, while the Deekin, McPelter, and the rest uv em wuz a payin the niggers their witness fees.

Ex they wuz a leaving the Court Room, Bigler sung out: "Deekin, ef you send on that petishen to Frankfort, I sheld send on a protest, provin that every one uv the niggers who bear your name hev a natural right to it. Let it alone, Deekin, let it alone. Ef the niggers kin stand the name, you ought not to object."

And he and Pollock rolled off together, laffin vociferously. It wuz a plot atween em to annoy the Corners. Wood, O! wood that we cood be delivered from em.

"PETROLEUM V. NABBY, P. M., (which is Postmaster.)" The Erie Railroad Disaster—Robbery of the Dead and Dying.

Harrowing as are the reports of the recent accident near Port Jervis, are eclipsed by the stories told by the sacreligious robbery of the dead and wounded which immediately followed the accident.

During the dark hours of that fearful night, money in large sums and gold watches were taken from the pockets of the dead and dying, and gold rings from the fingers of the victims.

In one instance a diamond ring was filed from the finger of a lady who was at the time conscious enough only to be able afterward to tell the story.

The New York Times special says by whomsoever these robberies were committed, they were sufficiently numerous to ask for more space than you could find at this time to relate them.
