This Week in Washington

SPECIAL TO UNION-GAZETTE

Washington, July 31—Coming back to work in the steaming, miasmatic swamp which is Washington in the dog-days, the members of both houses of Congress are taking stock of the political situation and reluctantly approaching the big job which the President had dumped on their desks in preparation for making the national defense program effective.

It is exaggeration that all of them wish they were somewhere else. Few of them, see that they can do much in Washington to further their own political prospects or those of their respective parties, and most of them are afraid that if they don't stay on the job something will happen overnight to give the war situation an entirely different aspect from the American point of view.

The biggest Congressional task is that of tax revision. The country has committed itself to expenditures for defense almost as great as all that we spent in the World War, and the question now is where to get the money. The Ways and Means Committee of the House, where all revenue bills must originate, has had a staff of financial and tax experts working on the problem for weeks. So has the Finance Committee of the Senate. Thousands of proposals have been offered by representatives of the Executive departments. Only two facts stand out clearly so far.

First, every department or bureau of the Government which has to do with spending public money is prepared to resist to the bitter end any reduction in their respective expenditures. Second, no matter how successful Congress may be in reducing unnecessary expenses, the new taxes that will have to be imposed will be staggering in their immensity.

Debt Limit Raised

No doubt remains here that an increase in the borrowing authority of the Treasury will have to be voted. A national debt of 50 billions or even more by the time the next Congress meets in January and the President to be elected in November is sworn in, seems to be on the cards.

However the new taxes are distributed they will fall ultimately on the consuming public. That is axiomatic. Every effort will be made in Congress to tell the people otherwise, but privately every Senator and Representative admits that when the war spending really begins every citizen will feel the pinch of higher prices for everything he buys.

Depending upon how imminent the threat of involvement in the European war appears, Washington looks for long-winded and partisan speeches when the tax measures come to the floor for debate, in the effort to convince the voters that it all isn't going to cost them anything and, anyhow, the other fellows are to blame.

Greatest Emergency

The wisest observers here apprehend that the mixture of Presidential politics with what most regard as the greatest national emergency the nation has faced in a quarter of century and more will result in failure to carry the war preparations to the necessary point of completeness, and at the same time complicate the political situation. It is pointed out that the present Administration has it in its power to aggravate the war situation to the point where public opinion will demand action that would involve the nation actually in war.

Unless such a situation arises, however, the seasoned observers of the political scene give Mr. Willkie and the Republican party at least an even break with Mr. Roosevelt and the Democrats. On the war question, as stated in the platforms of the two parties and expressed by their respective candidates, there is so little difference that they may be regarded as unanimous. That leaves the Presidential campaign to be fought out on domestic issues and the personalities of the candidates.

So far, there has been no revolt in the Republican ranks. Mr Willkie comes nearer to having a united party behind him than any candidate of his party has had since 1928. That there is a deep division in the Democratic party is held to have been indicated by Senator Carter Glass's convention speech opposing a third term; by National Chairman Farley's refusal to take part in the movement to renominate Mr. Roosevelt; by Senator Burke's withdrawal from the party and his pledge of support to Mr. Willkie, and other straws which, to the eyes of those whose business it is to interpret such signs, point to serious disaffection among Democratic leaders, if not among the party voters.

BIG PARADE TO FEATURE FETE WEEK

Visiting, Local Firemen, VFW to March Next Wednesday

Ten visiting fire departments, besides the Newark Fire Department, and the Arcadia Memorial Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, will be in line in the big parade next Wednesday that will feature the Old Home Week and Jubilee being sponsored jointly by the local firemen and the VFW.

The VFW Band, the Washington Post Drum and Bugle Corps and the State School Drum Corps will also march and a number of the visiting fire companies are expected to bring along musical units.

Reviewing stand for the parade will be located at the monument in the Main St. Park where judges will select winners for the various prizes offered, including awards for the best appearing company, the largest visiting company, and the best drum corps and band in line.

Two blasts of the fire horn will start the parade promptly at 7:30 p. m., according to Loren Olmsted, parade marshall. The marchers will move south on East Ave. from Williams St. to East Maple Ave., west to Madison St., north to Washington St., east to Main St., south on Main St. to Water St. to the carnival grounds.

Lyons firemen will head the parade with the VFW Band and the Newark Firemen and VFW will bring up the rear. Mayor R. E. Chittenden and Dr. John Hoeffler of the Newark State School will be two of the judges in the reviewing stand with two more still to be selected.

After the arrival of the parade at the Carnival, the Manchester drill team will give an exhibition drill, according to Newark Fire Chief Olin Cornell who is co-chairman of the celebration with Max Humphrey.

A carnival, featuring Karl Middletown's Shows and numerous concessions, will be open to the public every night next week under the joint sponsorship of the firemen and the VFW. Highlight of the carnival program will be a free act featuring Lucille Anderson in a 110-foot swan dive into a tank of water. This thrilling performance is scheduled each night at 10:30.

L-A Bank Reduces Interest on Certain Special Accounts

Interest rates on special interest accounts on amounts ranging from $1,000 to $7,500 will be reduced to one per cent a year, half a per cent less than at present, by the Lincoln-Alliance Bank and Trust Company beginning September 1st, according to announcement of rate changes by Raymond N. Ball, president.

Interest rates on amounts from $100 to $1,000 will remain at one and one half per cent as at present. No interest will be paid on amounts from $7,500 to $25,000 under the new schedule. Present rate for this group is one per cent.

Lack of demand for commercial loans and the abnormally low interest yield on securities coupled with the need for maintaining larger reserves owing to uncertain world conditions prompts the action, according to Mr Ball.

Bids to Be Let on Monday For Building Mud Mills Road

Work of improving roads in the village, town and county is going forward steadily.

Completed yesterday was the reconstruction of the Newark to Phelps State highway which has been improved from a 16-foot concrete road to a 20-foot wide black topped highway with gravel shoulders, under direction of Ralph Storm, district state engineer.

Bids for re-building the Mud Mills Road from Earl Welcher's to Ganze's will be let August 5th, according to Supervisor E. A. Smith. The three-mile stretch which is being built as part of the county highway program will cost an estimated $30,000.

Under the county's five-year roads program work on the road was not slated until next year, but an additional allotment from the state has made it possible for the County Highway Department to go ahead with the project. The new road will be a 16-foot wide macadam strip with 6-foot shoulders.

Village forces in the meantime have started work this week to complete the Allen Reservoir Road as a WPA project. Re-building and black topping the road is expected to be finished by the end of August, Village Engineer LeRoy Wrich reports.

Bids were opened last Wednesday in Albany and work was started this week on Hadden Road near Savannah. Contract for building the three and a half mile stretch was awarded to Cash M. Willis of Hornell, N. Y. on his low bid of $31,018.00.

SPUD FIELD DAY SLATED

County Growers to Attend Event Aug. 8

A large number of Wayne potato growers plan to participate in the state wide Potato Field Day scheduled Thursday, August 8, according to M. F. Butts, Sodus, secretary of the Empire State Potato Club. The event, which is jointly sponsored by the state club and the farm bureaus of Western New York, will be held near Batavia on one of the farms owned by Gilbert Prole.

This eleventh annual state affair promises to be one of the largest yet held. It will enable growers to visit the establishment of a Master Farmer, Gilbert Prole and see how he operates extensively in the production of potatoes, field beans, peas, alfalfa and small grains. Mr. Prole is also widely known as a lamb feeder.

A great deal of farm machinery is manufactured and sold within a few miles of Batavia. The trade show committee predicts one of the largest exhibits of machinery ever assembled in this state in connection with the tour.

Only a few miles away from the Prole farm, near Stafford, are potato rotation plots of the College of Agriculture, and the widely-known Elba muck section. The day before the Field Day, August 7, tours of inspection will be conducted to these spots.

Complete programs are available in the Farm Bureau office, Sodus.

Egg Holding Room Visits Scheduled On Poultry Tour

Poultrykeepers of Wayne County are to have a tour within the county on Tuesday, August 13, according to Frank Beneway, chairman of the County Poultry Committee. The itinerary includes visits to four farms in Williamson and Ontario.

Egg holding rooms will be the theme of the poultry tour this year. Each of the farms visited will have an egg holding room which will give poultrykeepers an opportunity to see them in action. Farms visited will be Abram Moll's, Gil Day's and Arthur Moorman's of Williamson and Frank Beneway's of Ontario.

Egg holding rooms are springing up like magic on the farms of poultrykeepers in Wayne County since the advent of the Wayne County egg label in March, 1938. Eggs that are held in these approved rooms are bringing premium prices in the New York market. In fact the highest premiums of recent years are now being received by egg label cooperators.

Members of the Wayne Farm Bureau egg marketing committee which has done a fine job in handling Wayne egg label work, according to Beneway, are Abram Moll of Williamson, Farley Porter of Sodus and Elmer Stone of Clyde.

The noon stop of the tour August 13th at the beach in Pultneyville will also feature egg holding rooms as Prof. H. E. Botsford of Cornell will at that time discuss similar rooms he has visited in other states.

Rainstorm Forces Big Plane Down At Local Airport

A tri-motored, 12-passenger plane was forced down at Newark Airport and an auto ran off Route 31 west of Port Gibson and turned over in the ditch during Monday's minor cloudburst in this area.

An .85-inch rainfall was recorded by L. J. Thraves at the East Newark Barge Canal Locks during the 15-minute storm which flooded cellars and sent streams of water coursing along curbsides.

A party from Cincinnati was in the car which ran off highway 31 in the blinding rain Despite the fact the car turned over and was badly damaged none of the occupants, whose names could not be learned, was badly hurt, according to reports.

9-Year-Old Rochester Boy Drowns Sunday in Canal

A Sunday outing turned to tragedy this week when the nine-year-old son of a Newark man was drowned in the Barge Canal Widewaters at "The Point", 3 miles west of Newark.

The youngster, Eugene Le Roy, who lived with his mother, Mrs. La Vera Davis at 133 Durnan St., Rochester, had gone to the Widewaters with his father, Erwin Le Roy, and his stepmother, Mrs. Erwin Le Roy of Newark.

According to Le Roy, the boy was paddling about on an inflated inner tube and playing with a small boat off the shore in front of them about 4:30 p. m. when suddenly they saw the tube floating alone on the water.

The body was not recovered until nearly an hour later when it was located by Carl Provo, Newark, Le Roy's brother-in-law. State Trooper B. W. Later the truck is to be equipped with a hydraulic wing and hose plow. Because of its power and speed the new machine is expected to be a big asset to the town's snow fighting equipment as well as being valuable for general highway purposes. Total cost of the complete truck-plow is $12,500.
