CARE CLOSES IRAN MISSION AFTER $24 MILLION IN AID

New York — Closing of its mission in Iran was announced recently by CARE after 21 years, during which the international aid and relief agency agency provided the Middle East nation with assistance valued at $24 million.

In a surprising bold statement in Teheran Iran's capital, Frank L. Goldsmith, CARE executive director, was deserted by the Iranian government and received the personal thanks of Queen Farah for the agency's service to her people.

CARE originated in this country, as a gift package by citizens of American and Canadian contributors, included the hundreds of thousands of citizens and community centers and the distribution of millions pounds of food to the needy.

The successful public relations came in 1962 when an earthquake wrecked 200 villages in the northeast corner of Iran. Within a brief period, CARE had delivered hundreds of tons of food, medicine, supplies and tents for temporary shelter for the victims.

With the above emergency ended, the agency undertook many long-term projects to help reconstruct the town of Bam, which was almost totally destroyed. Roads, homes, schools, medicines, and emergency structures were built and the agricultural town was dedicated in 1966.

Today, movie and personality emerge as being included in the mainstream of employment for Negroes who seek vocational training.

In a recent study just published, the 11th earnings of Negroes in the movie industry reported. The study indicated, that the movie industry primarily blacks, pay a premium for their services, but also discriminates against them. For example, the study showed that earnings of a white individual fluctuated between $3,000 and $10,000 a year. A nonwhite person with similar training, skill, and experience, on the other hand, would get approximately $2,000 a year.

If this individual is a high school graduate, he has an excellent chance of being employed as an actor, but if he is not a high school graduate, the lifetime earnings of this person is $412,355, and a nonwhite person will earn $1,000 a year less, or $40,000 less over a lifetime.

All of these bits of information are used to point to one thing, namely, that the industry management, and that the nonwhite person would have to be much more sophisticated with his money management than a white person simply because he is getting less for the labor that he contributes to the society every year. Also, the nonwhite person is often individually forced to learn from the mistakes of others and experience a great deal [illegible] will earn less money than the white person. Therefore, the burden is on the nonwhite person to learn
