JOBS is breaking up that old gang of mine

This old gang, guys who dropped out, got strung out, guys who hung out with no place to go but trouble. They went to work, thanks to JOBS.

JOBS, that's Job Opportunities in the Business Sector. A program of the National Alliance of Businessmen. The gang has started to die, the guys have started to live.

JOBS has turned over 200,000 hard-core unemployables into manpower. Given guys their first good break. Of course it isn't perfect. Of course it could be better. But it's working.

The National Alliance of Businessmen was formed by American business communities to help solve the critical problem of the hard-core unemployed. Business provides the jobs and costs the hiring and training. Government finds the people and pays the extraordinary training costs through special contracts.

Funds for the new JOBS '70 contracts are available right now. So, if you're an employer for a business or nonprofit organization, do yourself a favor. Call your local National Alliance of Businessmen.
