trate on the major or main problems suffered by the majority of the class. . . . At least school systems, in many cases, today have special reading teachers that try to see as many students as possible as often as possible and work with them individually to improve their reading. But, as is obvious, there are so many students and the teacher's time is limited, so the student is helped to an extent, although not completely. . . . So, the problem still exists and will continue to exist as long as people are individuals, with individual learning speeds and not interests. Unfortunately, though, if one can not read or is limited in his reading ability he has problems in other areas. For if he can not read a math problem correctly, obviously he can not do it correctly and on and on. In the outside world, he can not deal with papers he has to sign or newspapers he should read to learn what is going on in the big wide world. Perhaps this is a picture that is too gloomy, but when one can not read well there is not a bright ray of light to look forward to. It is a sad state of affairs when one can not read. Adults and teenagers alike suffer from this. It is not something to hide and feel ashamed of, but one should buck up to the responsibility and learn either by himself or with the help of others. Students can check with teachers for help. Most teachers today are very concerned with the problem and are extremely willing to help. Other students and peers can help, too. . . . In the case of adults, again there are teachers, groups, and other adults who are more than willing to help. It is not something to be ashamed of, but rather something to encourage you to reach out and try to attain. It can be done, perhaps slowly, but with pride and perseverance it can become one of the greatest achievements in your life.

W. Martinsburg Yule Program

Strictly in keeping with the energy situation and enjoying every minute of it was a large crowd attending the Christmas program in the Methodist Church at West Martinsburg. . . . Franklin stoves heat the building and kerosene lamps and chandeliers are used for lighting. Behind the pulpit are two single kerosene lamps with large mercury reflectors for better lighting. In the rear of the building are six additional kerosene lamps. . . . Music is furnished by an old fashioned pump organ. The Church of the Nazarene, Lowville, presented the Christmas musical program. The church was packed for the occasion and no one could say "They were not warm." The building is only open for use about twice a year.
